With the tips commented before is it sufficient to install SFS on my A1 or may I know something more?

Read http://intuitionbase.com/static.php?section=en_SFS-walkthrough for the most important things, additionally you should use the SFS/2 mode only for one or two partitions on which you want to use files > 4 GB and make backups of such partitions more often since there is no data recovery software for it.

What are their main advantages comparing to FFS2?

It's much faster and it's a journalling file system (no validation required if you reboot, switch off the computer or something crashes badly while data is written).
